France Frets Over Nuke Plants and Heatwave Toll

By Brian Love

PARIS (Reuters) - France called emergency talks on Monday on overheating at nuclear power plants as Europe's heatwave entered its second week, with officials torn between output cuts and allowing hotter water to pour into rivers...

The Bugey power station near Lyon on the Rhone river has already requested a special exemption to pour hotter water back into the river...

Meier wrote the following in 1995 and it is in the "And Yet They Fly!" published in 2001:

"The danger of accidents in nuclear reactors will increase throughout the world. Regarding this subject, France in particular must be extraordinarily careful in every way, for one prophecy warns of a strong probability of an accident near Lyon, which can be prevented as long as the responsible individuals undertake the right steps - a prophecy can be changed."

P.S. The above comes right after the following predictions from 1995 on page 348 of "And Yet They Fly!":

US attack on Iraq. Corroborated: 2003
Increase in Islamic attacks to follow. Corroborated: 2002, 2003
Spread of Mad Cow Disease to other animals and humans. Corroborated: 2002, 2003
New disease and epidemic. Corroborated: 2003
Increased public concerns about chemical weapons. Corroborated: 2003
